Calloway County Fair To Be Held September 17, 18, 19 As Planned

Arrangements are going forward to have the fair in the new Planters Loose Leaf Floor where it was held last year. Plans are being made for farm displays, home-makers displays, merchants' displays in the building. Persons interested in display space should contact Ray Treon who has a diagram of the building and the space available.

In a telephone conversation yesterday with Dr. B. F. Pigg, state veterinarian at Frankfort, assurance was given the fair management that the outbreak of anthrax was at a standstill, that no new cases had developed within the last week and Dr. Pigg assured the management that unless new cases occurred in or near Calloway county the fair would not be interfered with.

Committees have been appointed to raise funds for the premium list and this work will go forward immediately. The business men of Murray and Calloway county have in the past been very generous in support of the fair and we have their assurance that adequate funds will be raised for this year's premium list. Persons interested in exhibiting animals, home products, or farm products should go ahead with their plans and be ready for exhibition on the date as set out.

Plans have been made for two nights entertainment which will be free to the public.

Slight damage was incurred when a truck belonging to the Sykes Brothers Mill caught on fire. Little damage was reported in any of the conflagrations.

Two Broken Bones In One Week Is Enough

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jones, 1610 Miller avenue, suffered two broken bones in one week. First it was Mr. Jones. While handling his pony, he slipped and fell, breaking his leg just above the ankle. He is now able to get around with the aid of a crutch, and a steel appliance that enables him to walk without putting weight on the affected part.

A week after this accident, Mrs. Jones slipped and fell in the yard, breaking her arm.

Both are getting along fine now, but Mr. Jones thinks the family has had enough broken bones for some time to come.

He served the Foreign Christian Missionary Society as secretary of foreign missions from 1905 until its work and that of five other national boards was united in the United Christian Missionary Society in 1920. He continued to serve that organization as foreign secretary, and then as its president for eight years. In 1939 he resigned to become president of the College of the Bible from which position he has just retired.

Dr. Corey has traveled in Africa, Asia, and South America and has written a book dealing with each of these trips. He wrote "Among Central African Tribes" in 1912, and "Among Asia's Needy Millions" following his journey to the Far East in 1914. "Among South American Friends" tells of his visit to South American mission fields when he attended the South

A life long student of world missions, a clear and forceful writer, a strong and popular speaker, Dr. Corey has been associated with the missionary leaders of the Christian world for a generation. ### Brumbaugh Explains Differences In High School And College Football

By DON BRUMBAUGH

The National Federation Rules used by the high schools of Kentucky have several different rules than collegiate ball. Some of the major differences are listed here in this column.

The Federation allows as many as two subs to enter the game without stopping the clock where as collegiate rules allow only one man to enter.

The Federation has no restrictions on the movement of the linebackers whereas collegiate rules prohibit the center, guards and tackles from playing any position other than the one they report for on entering the game.

Any two eligible players may touch a forward pass and the pass may be caught by another eligible player in Federation rules. The collegiate rules prevent two successive players on the same team from touching a pass.

More than one forward pass may be thrown behind the line of scrimmage in high school ball whereas collegiate ball allows only one pass from behind the line.

The rules covering the protection of the passer are stricter in the Federation rules than in collegiate rules.

The rules covering enforcement of foul penalties in collegiate ball are handled separate from general rules whereas high school rules allow pass penalties to be covered under the same code as general penalties.

The free kick rules of collegiate ball are complicated and difficult

Rattlesnake Cocktail

NEW YORK, Sept. 3 (U. P.)—The Federal Bureau of Narcotics reported today a recipe for a Rattlesnake Cocktail allegedly very popular with the Chinese on the West Coast.

The recipe: Put one live rattlesnake in a jar; add rice wine, dried toads, soy beans, sliced deer antlers and a few dried seahorses. Let it stand for six months then drink at your own risk.

The bureau said it had seized a bottle of the stuff in a recent raid in New York's Chinatown.

Mantz Tries For New Speed Record

NEW YORK, Sept. 3 (U. P.)—Paul Mantz, Hollywood stunt flier who won the Bendix Air Race last week-end, took off from Laguardia Field at 1:26 p.m. EDT today for Burbank, Calif., on an attempt to set a new cross-country speed record.

Mantz, flying a converted P-51 fighter plane, said he hoped to make the trip in six hours, 27 minutes. The present East-West record of seven hours, 20 minutes, was set by an Army B-29 August 1, 1946.

Today's Sports Parade

By Oscar Fraley
United Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK, Sept. 3 (UP)—"Mr. Inside" and "Mr. Outside" wind up tonight on the familiar turf of the polo grounds.

That famed combination of Glenn Davis and Felix Blanchard, one of the most storied and gloried in football history, will play their final game together with the Eastern College All-Stars against the New York Giants.

It will be a different story than the three previous visits the Army touchdown twins made to the heights above the Harlem. Those other times they ran rampant against undermanned Duke University teams. The opposition tonight is rough, tough and burly and intent on upholding its professionalism. But win, lose or draw, these two kids with the fresh, gleaming gold bars of Second Lieutenants aren't taking any risk in their farewell. They proved in the past three years their right to rank with the football immortals of all time.

Their deeds are written indelibly in the record books and cherished within the gray stone fortress up the Hudson. They came together in the fall of 1944 and since then "Army" had gone without defeat, winning 27 games and tying one over a three-year span.

Davis was a lithe, pink-cheeked youngster with wings on his heels.

Blanchard was a bronzed, heavy-muscled lad with olive cheeks who had won his way into the Point through the regular army. At that time they were simply embryo Lieutenants but, they made of the Army football team an unstoppable juggernaut which carried them to fame.

Davis, only five feet, 10 inches and 170 pounds, opened them up by slipping through the tackles or fleeing around the ends with the elusiveness of a phantom. Blanchard, a six footer packing 220 pounds, simply brought them back together again by barreling through the middle.

They were the spearhead as Army won nine in 1944, compiling 504 points to the opposition's 35 and humbling a still bitter Notre Dame by a record of 59-0. They added nine more wins in 1945, running up 412 points to 46, and scored nine wins last season against a scoreless deadlock with Notre Dame.

"They could have named their price in pro ranks this year but because of their fame and wartime safety at the Point, it became a moral issue and there was no other course but to remain in service. On post-graduation leave they went to Hollywood and made a picture and one incident there proves that at 22 they still are naive youngsters despite their fame.

"Is this going to be a B picture?" Davis asked. "I don't see any name stars around."

"You two are the stars of this one," an executive laughed. "Mr. Inside" and "Mr. Outside" just shook their heads in bewilderment.

They were named to the College All-Stars to play against the Bears in Chicago and Davis sat it out with a bad knee while Blanchard played on defense. And now they come up to the finale, both of them able physically and hoping for one more good game at the Polo Grounds.

After that, Lt. Glenn Davis of the Infantry reports to Fort Riley, Kans., and Lt. Felix Blanchard of the Air Corps goes to Randolph Field, Tex.

But there are those who still insist that the two of them should have been graduated five-star generals.

Blalock-Miller Wedding Sunday

In the First Baptist Church Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock Miss Janice Blalock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parvin Blalock was married to Jackie Miller son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Miller.

The Rev. B. B. Sawyer, pastor, performed the single ring ceremony before an assembly of close friends and relatives. The vows were spoken before an altar of gladioli, dahlias, crepe myrtle and other summer blossoms backed with fern.

The bride chose for her wedding a lovely aqua-blue wool-crepe ensemble and black accessories. At her shoulder was pinned a corsage of pink rose buds.

The attendants were Miss Jackie

Ann Maddox and Joe Graves Baker. Miss Maddox wore a printed sheer frock and black accessories. Her flowers were red roses.

Miss Ivetta Morris, pianist, used the traditional wedding marches and played Traumeres by Schumann during the pledging of the vows.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller attended Murray High School.

Following a wedding trip to the Smoky Mountains, they will reside in Murray where Mr. Miller is employed by the Southern Bell Telephone Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Rubin James, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Gargus, Miss Ruth Jones and Miss Margie Crass spent the weekend in the Smoky Mountains and Lookout Mountain.

Party Plaid

Bright plaid wool combines with black velvet for gay evenings.

THE wool-of-evening idea is one that has met with enthusiastic acceptance everywhere by women who like to be comfortably warm as well as glamorous for the winter's social doings.

The college girl likes party wools in plaids, lively and gay—and if the skirt is separate, so it can be worn with different tops, so much the better. And she likes it to be ankle length for evening party-going. If the skirt is full and dird, practical considerations dictate that it should take its fullness in unpressed pleats, to simplify pressing and hem adjustments.

The New York designed skirt and basque jacket combines red, black and white plaid wool with black velvet in the season's new rounded hip, the waistline look.

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE
THE hands pressing her throat were so suddenly released, with lights so bright, many sounds so confusing, that Leitha took an uncertain step, stumbled and fell....

When she came back to consciousness, her first thought was one of shame for having blundered out in such a silly manner. Like a Victorian heroine, she had never fainted before in all her life.

She attempted to sit up and discovered that she had been carried to the padded window seat of the breakfast room.

"It is easy, my dear," a voice advised.

Leitha recognized the little lawyer, Joseph Clairmont. He was standing over her, vigorously polishing his glasses, smiling down on her.

She saw that nearly all of the rest of the household was assembled in the room. But the lawyer's presence was the most surprising. It was difficult not to emit a low, stifled exclamation when she saw Justin was present too, looking just as he had before he followed her into the dark pantry.

"I'm all right," Leitha said. "She found not only that she was all right, but that she could actually be sorry for Justin. She supposed she must be sorry for Charles, too, noticing that the plump lady was dissolved in tears.

TANIS, in a soft blue negligee, her ash-blond hair in its madonna style, did not look quite so mocking as usual. Robert Gates, who had not returned to town, was not, as usual, at her side. He sat somewhat apart, his hands hanging between his knees.

There were also two strange men present. Grim-looking individuals, Leitha thought them.

"I'd like to know what it's all about," she said straight now. She was herself once more. More than just herself, she was Mason Tanis's granddaughter, demanding an explanation.

"I thought"—her eyes went first to the little lawyer—"that you had returned to Atlanta, Mr. Clairmont."

He shook his head, put his glasses back on his nose. Through them, his eyes were rebuking.

"And I thought," he said reproachfully, "that you said you trusted me implicitly, since your grandfather had advised that you could. Maybe he was wrong, and because, maybe I took too big a risk. But naturally I did not leave you didn't really believe I would do that, did you, Leitha?"

Rather than hurt his feelings, Leitha said she guessed not. She did see now that she had been rather stupid. She might have guessed that the lawyer would not run out on her.

"As a matter of fact, I did leave, but I came back," Joseph Clairmont said. "I brought reinforcements with me."

A nod of his head indicated the two strangers. Leitha supposed that she would have recognized them as policemen earlier if she hadn't been feeling so groggy.

"We have been around for quite some time," the lawyer continued. "However, we just managed to reach the pantry at the crucial moment. It is, indeed, unfortunate. Leitha that you had to undergo such an experience."

Wait until she told him about the pillow episode! However, she would not take the wind out of his sails just yet. She made a little gesture, asking him to go on with his explanations.

"It was very brave of you," Mr. Clairmont gave her his nicest smile.

Andrés must have thought it brave, too, for now he came over to stand behind her, giving her, as he slipped past, one of his long, intimate looks.

"Your bravery has cleared up everything," the lawyer went on. "Moreover, your grandfather was discovered that she had been carried to the padded window seat of the breakfast room."

It was difficult not to emit a low, stifled exclamation when she saw Justin was present too, looking just as he had before he followed her into the dark pantry.
